

Leading happy schools

A joint iNet and ASCL conference

Thursday 15 May 2008, Park Plaza, Belfast International Airport

iNet Principal Supporter

This conference explores how schools across the UK are developing the well-being agenda and offers practical steps for implementing well-being strategies for both students and staff.

Schools need to respond to the well-being agenda – it is not about well-being or attainment: but both. By attending this conference you will discover how to:

- Enhance the emotional health and welfare of young people
- Create conditions which lead to student well-being and how to break down barriers which hinder their development
- Explore the critical relationship between student and staff well-being
- Create more ‘intelligent’ workplaces
- Ensure students play a role in the process of creating happy schools

You will leave this conference with up-to-date information about the well-being agenda, how schools are responding to it and the latest research and initiatives such as Social and Emotional Aspects of Learning (SEAL).

Why attend this conference?

With showcases from schools in Northern Ireland, Scotland, Wales and England exploring the various approaches to leading happy schools, this conference will give you the opportunity to:

- Share and discover best practice
- Develop whole school strategies for implementation
- Explore the link between well-being and sustainable school improvement
- Investigate sources of information and further guidance

UK series with ASCL and iNet

ASCL and iNet are committed to giving schools in the UK opportunities to come together so they can share best practice and bring cohesion to the way we work.

Our first conference was held in Wales in January 2008 and focused on Leading the outward facing school.

The final event will focus on leading developing schools in 2009.

Details will be available shortly: www.ssat-inet.net
